Letter from a citizen of Sudavik.

I want to thank you for a good paper. But I want to make a complaint about the bank. Why he isn't open during the lunch hour. I'm working from 8- 16 every day, and if I want to go to the bank I always have to leave work early to go to the bank. Isn't there anything you could do to open it earlier. It would make a lot of difference if the bank would close 15 min. past 12 and be opened again 15 min. past 13. That would help a lot of people to get to the bank without taking a break from work.

On the positive side - I think the kindergarten is very good. Because I've got 3 kids and I have two of them in kindergarten, without having to pay a dime. I think that is great, considering that the kindergarten in Bolungarvik is very expensive and they don't have breakfast and only fruit and vegetables. But we need to get something done about the bank and have it open for the rest of us here in this town.

With best regards ,citizen of Sudavik. -Kolbrún

Interview with Kjartan G. Karlsson, a former whalehunter.

A few days back, I ran into a very interesting man in Sudavik, known as Hrefnu-Geiri. He used to be a great whale hunter back in the day. He told me about when Norwegian people used to whale hunt and bring the whales here to Langeyri, and the Dwarfstone around 1900.

Because of the whale hunt here, Sudavik became the richest sea village in Iceland. Most people in Sudavik had jobs that connected to the sea. Some people were also farmers and had sheep on their farms. A few had cows only for personal use.

The Whale-station in Sudavik came here around 1882, when Norwegian whale hunter Svend Foyn came to Iceland looking for a place to build a whale station. After travelling through West fjords he decided to build it in Langeyri, in Alftafjordur where Sudavik is. The whale-station was operational for almost 2 decades, or from 1882 to 1904.

Kjartan also told me, that Sudavik was twice as big then, than it's today, or around 616 residents while the whale-station was operational in Alftafjordur and Seydisfjordur.

I asked him why he became a whale hunter, and he told me that the boat was there, and the equipment, and he was interested in whale hunting. He did not start hunting until 1970, though he went out with his grandfather every chance he got. His grandfather was the first Icelander to hunt a mink whale, in 1914.

His first whale hunting boat, was called Mummi and the next one called Hafrun. You can't hunt a whale by yourself, so Kjartan had his son Kalli, and his friend Baldvin Bjornsson with him. They hunted all their mink whales in Isafjardardjup and Anarfjordur.

The meat from the whales was sold at the shore, or by the pier. But now, every whale has to be landed in Reykjavik, to examine the meat. Kjartan and his associates sailed with the whale meat to Isafjordur, Bolungarvik and sometimes to other small places in Isafjardardjup, before the roads came.

All whale hunting in Iceland was shut down because of Greenpeace, an organization that protects the whales from harm. Kjartan says that these are bunch of fools and got a lot of people fired. You could not hunt whale or seal because of these people. Also the price of fox-skin went down, all because of famous actress, called Birgitte Bardot stopped wearing them. Fox-skin was so expensive, that two skins was a hole year's pay for an average worker in the year 1930.

Today, almost all whale hunting is forbidden, but a small number of whales is allowed to be hunted, for research. Most of the meat is sold to Japan, but some meat is sold here in Iceland. There are a lot of people in the world that are angry at the Icelanders.

Germans sea angling.

Many people could guess that some foreign tourists come to the West fjords to cultivate fishing on small boats. Which is called to sea-angle. This activity would leave over millions in income during that period. There are two companies that attract people to come, Hvildarklettur and Sumarbyggd. "About 1200 people came last year (2009) but we expect more this year. Even though we had to put our price up" Said Elias Gudmundsson manager.

I interviewed one guide of sea angle, Matthias Brill and he said that when he came first here to Iceland April 2006 to help Icelanders to start this program. He introduced it to the Icelanders and taught them how do it. Now he takes the tourist guide about the boats and goes with them on a tour out to sea, and shows them how to catch the big ones. The sea angling is now in Talknafjordur and Sudavik and this year Bolungarvik is joining the group. Which is only during the summer time from April to September, they can have it all year but Matthias told me that is much safer to be only during summer time than wintertime. "We want people to have a safe holiday." There is much more risk in winter if the weather is bad. The tourist steer their boats themselves. There are 21 big boats for that activity. And tourist can decide themselves when they go out to sea and how long they are going to be. They are in contact with the coast guard and phone contact with the managers. 70% of all of them that come for sea angling are from Germany, 15% from Switzerland and 15% from Netherlands. On the whole there are about 1100 – 1200 people which come for 2 weeks turns. And they all have a good time. To get to know how to catch the big fish and get to know how peaceful it is here in Sudavik.
